Concretopia: A Journey Around the Rebuilding of Postwar Britain by John Grindrod – review Crap towns? The idealism, and the mistakes, of the postwar architects and town planners. A decent introduction to the story of post-war housing in Britain. The story is well-told, and the pace is maintained, although the analysis is fairly shallow and too many chapters rely on baggy anecdotes and over-long quotes from eyewitnesses and other sources. There are few connecting themes
