In 2008 a wealthy dinosaur fan purchased a specimen named Triceratops Cliff for $1 million and donated it to the Boston Museum of Science. Unfortunately, the hunger for Triceratops bones has resulted in a thriving grey market, as unscrupulous fossil hunters tried to poach and sell this dinosaur's remains. Triceratops would have been able to cause a lot of damage to an attacker! It also had a third shorter horn at the end of its nose. This gives it its dinosaur name, which means 'three-horned face'. "Meet The Triceratops" - A nonfiction dinosaur book for children. This Triceratops book is filled with cool pictures and interesting facts about these long gone creatures that once roamed the planet.
