The field of social work can be classified into three categories of practice: macro social work, mezzo social work and micro social work. These three categories determine the scope of practice for the social worker. These three levels of social work practice at times overlap and always influence each other, so it is important to understand the distinctions between these social work approaches. Macro Social Work. The practice of macro social work is the effort to help clients by intervening in large systems. Macro social work is a broad field that centers on the investigation of larger scale social problems, and the development and implementation of social interventions that aim to effect positive change at the community, state, and national levels. MACRO SOCIAL WORK PRACTICE Macro Social Work is significantly expanding in three areas. These are: Community Organization • A return to the need for community-driven processes, in a time that has enhanced the field of rebirth and rediscovery
